

Dear Hiring Manager,

It is a genuine pleasure to recommend Liz Heaney as a senior program manager. Having worked closely with Liz for several years within the Products for All team at Google, I have seen firsthand her impact on our core accessibility infrastructure, our team culture, and the broader disability innovation landscape.

As the leader of our Core Accessibility effort, Liz was tasked with a highly complex challenge in the organization: implementing accessibility standards across a vast array of internal tools, frameworks, and team processes. This required more than just technical oversight; it required influencing without authority. Liz excelled here, building durable relationships across diverse engineering, design, and tooling teams to ensure that accessibility was not merely an afterthought, but a prioritized requirement. She also did a great job navigating upward to key leaders, building an engaged steering committee of executive sponsors who respected and advocated for this work within Core.

Liz's contributions extended well beyond her immediate remit:

- Champion of Accessibility Analysts: Liz was a foundational member of the Google Accessibility Analyst Managers Community. She played a critical role in maturing this relatively new role profile, transitioning it from temporary support to a robust community of full-time experts. She was instrumental in refining role language, effectively engaging in cross-Google performance and promotion sessions, and establishing best practices that allowed this specialized group to thrive.
- Organizational Advocate: Her influence reached into the Disability Alliance ERG and the Accessibility and Disability Inclusion working group. By collaborating with Real Estate Workplace Services and People Operations, she ensured that the employee experience for people with disabilities was prioritized across the company's internal ecosystem.
- External Impact & Procurement: Liz recognized that accessibility begins at the source. She worked with industry leaders to improve procurement processes, advocating for accessibility to be recognized as a non-negotiable value in the vendor selection process.

Beyond her strategic achievements, Liz is an excellent people manager. She is proactive and genuinely caring, ensuring her reports feel seen, supported, and empowered to navigate the complexities of a large organization like Google. She has the important ability to manage many moving pieces simultaneously while maintaining a focus on the human element of the work.

Liz has my sincere recommendation for any organization looking for a senior program manager who can drive systemic change.

Best,

Laura Allen Director for Accessibility and Disability Innovation, Products for All Google
